Once across the ravine, the characters proceed to the next encounter: the Abandoned Camp.

ENCOUNTER 2: THE ABANDONED CAMP

It takes some time to pick up the trail on the other side of the ravine. The light is beginning to fade and the dust has obscured some of the tracks the Badoshi cultists left. Following the trail is now getting difficult, but it's important to keep going.

To begin this encounter, each character can attempt a Perception roll. If successful, they find a small rise in the land that allows them to better survey the terrain ahead. From this vantage point, one of the character sees what may be the remains of camp not too far in the distance. Did the Badoshi make it?

If the Perception roll is unsuccessful, then the characters stumble around trying to pick up the trail, wasting 3 hours in the process, meaning it is dark when they come upon the remains of an abandoned camp.

Someone definitely camped here recently. A shallow firepit has been dug, surrounded by a few stones, and there are smouldering ashes in the pit, indicating that the Badoshi passed by here within the past few hours. Are there any other clues that might help?

Characters can try to find other clues that may help. Each character can try either a Perception roll, an Insight roll, or a Willpower roll.

Perception Roll: A successful Perception roll means that one of the characters finds that, tucked under one of the rocks circling the firepit, is a torn piece of material. The material is of good quality cloth, and looks like it came from the hem of traditional Meerish shirt or skirt - of the kind most Meerish children wear. Looking under at the underside of the stone that is on top of the scrap of material, someone has scratched a few words:

"Six traitors. The Forbidden Hills. Angry spirits!"

This could well be a clue from one of the children, and it may indicate how many Badoshi the heroes are chasing, where they are heading, and some of the magic they might have.

Insight Roll: A successful Insight roll gives one of the characters an idea about where the Badoshi might be up to. The camp is not far from the ravine, which means that they felt confident enough to make camp, probably believing they were not being followed. Sure enough, there are the remains of a meal, and by the looks of things, enough for about six or seven people. This means they may now be taking their escape at a more leisurely pace, and not being so careful to hide their tracks.

Willpower Roll: About a day or so to the north are the Forbidden Hills, so called because they form the border between the lands loyal to Meeros and the homelands of the Badoshi Warlords. There are numerous caves in the Forbidden Hills, some of which are shrines to the Traitor Gods, and perhaps this might be where the Badoshi cultists are taking the children.

If none of the skill rolls succeed, then a characters can spend 1 Luck Point to receive a clue. Choose one of the above to help them out.

The characters can choose to camp here for the night and continue their pursuit tomorrow. Or they can continue through the night, ignoring how tired they are. If they choose to make camp and rest, then they can have a good meal and start refreshed the next morning. If they decided to carry on, then each character must make an Endurance roll: if they succeed, then they ignore their fatigue. If a character fails, they are beginning to grow weary, and from this point on, all their skills are at a penalty of -20 (that is, reduce all skills by 20%).

ENCOUNTER 3: THE DUST DEVIL

The Forbidden Hills are now in sight on the horizon: a range of low crags, dark against the blue sky, looking like the teeth of some gigantic monster slain in the Age of Heroes.

But there is also something else: all the characters can feel that a wind is picking up from somewhere - although the day has been calm, and this wind is unusual. Then, from the direction of the Forbidden Hills, they can see something moving, growing larger, getting faster, and coming straight at them. A column of dirt, dust and sharp stones, whipped into a sinister tornado, is heading right for the characters. This is a Dust Devil, an angry elemental spirit of the Traitor Gods and commanded by the Badoshi's Spirit Witch!

Fighting the Dust Devil is tough: it cannot be injured by normal weapons; if the character try to attack it with swords or spears, their weapons pass right through. It also spits out dust, grit and rocks at high speed in all directions.

The characters need to make two skill rolls: Evade and Conceal.

Evade is used to get out of the way of the debris that the Dust Devil hurls at them. If the skill roll is a success, then the character gets out of range of the debris and takes no damage. If the Evade roll fails, then the character takes 1d4 points of damage to 1d4+1 Hit Locations as they are struck by rocks, blasted by grit, and choked by dust.

Conceal is used to take cover and avoid further damage. There is scattered scrubby undergrowth and a few large

If defeating the Dust Devil looks impossible, then the characters can attempt to outrun it, charging to a cave that one of the characters might be able to see (successful Perception roll) in the foothills ahead. To outrun the Dust Devil, all the characters must succeed in Athletics rolls, which they can Augment with Brawn or Evade, whichever is higher. If the roll is a success, then they reach the safety of a cave, but they sustain 1d4 points of damage to one Hit Location. If the roll fails, then they sustain 1d4 damage to 1d4+2 Hit Locations, which are pummelled from the rear by the angry Dust Devil.

ENCOUNTER 4: THE FALSE SHRINE

If they investigate the shrine, they find a pair of connected caves that, long ago, were once used for foul ceremonies, but it is clear that no one has been here for many years. Still, if two characters both succeed in Perception rolls, or one character scores a Critical Success, they do find, hidden behind an old altar stone, a cleft in the rock that contains a small sack. Inside the sack is a knife made of flint, bone and what may be human skin wrapped around the handle. This is a Spirit Knife, used in sacrifices, and it has the power to harm spirits like the Dust Devil (it causes 1d6 damage), or to instantly sap the soul of a Spirit Witch (which causes instant death). Of course, the characters do not know this and will have to discover the Spirit Knife's powers for themselves.

ENCOUNTER 5: THE TRAITOR GODS' SHRINE

After another couple of hours climbing slowly into the Forbidden Hills, the heroes are now getting close to where the Badoshi have retreated to perform their vile ceremony.

At the top of the rise, the ground falls away on the northern side to form a circular valley. From the rise, the characters have plenty of cover to hide behind while watching the valley beyond, but they must use Stealth rolls if they want to get any closer without being seen or heard. The Badoshi have stationed one sentry near the mouth of the cave that the characters can see from their vantage point, the crooked star carving above the cave mouth indicating that this is another Traitor God temple.

If the character fails a Stealth roll while trying to creep closer, the sentry is allowed to make a Perception roll of his own: he has Perception 55%. If he succeeds, then he hears something; if he Critically succeeds (a roll of 6 or less), then he also sees the character who failed the Stealth roll. Either way, he calls for help, and is soon joined by another Badoshi sentry.

If the characters can get close to the sentry, then he can be surprised and either killed or taken prisoner. Of course, the characters have some ranged weapons, such as Zamothis' javelins, Gorkas' bow, or Mju's knives. Bubastis and Kara also have useful spells to help the characters and hinder the sentries. All Bubastis' spells are useful here, and Kara's Illusion and Voice spells are extremely helpful. Reward creative use of tactics and magic so that the heroes can get into the caves relatively unscathed and attempt their rescue. But if things go badly, they may have to deal with one or two sentries - and the sentries will attempt to raise the alarm, if they can.

ENCOUNTER 6: THE RESCUE

Once past the sentries, the characters find that the cave mouth forms a passage heading into the hillside. It extends for perhaps 30 metres, and then opens into a large natural cave some 25 metres in diameter. At the far end is a huge, roughly carved statue of one of the Traitor Gods, the demon known as Gau-Gau-Stau: a hideous, leering thing with blank eyes, twisted horns, and four arms with upturned hands that end in cruel talons.

In front of the statue is a wide altar, made of slabs of stone, and lying on it, tied and gagged, are the Lokanos children. They are terrified, but still struggle despite the terror of their situation. Standing over them is the Badoshi Spirit Witch, and watching her prepare to sacrifice the children are four Badoshi acolytes.

Saving the children means somehow taking down the Spirit Witch. The acolytes provide her with some cover, and for anyone to have a clear chance of a ranged weapon attack, they need to get two of the acolytes to move out of the way.

If the characters have managed to get into the cave without the alarm being raised by the sentries, then they have the advantage of surprise, and can try Stealth rolls to get close, prepare spells to distract, and to gain one free close-range attack on any of the acolytes that cannot be resisted.

Otherwise, if the Badoshi are aware that the characters are coming, or once the characters reveal their presence, a fight begins!

In the first round of the battle, the acolytes draw their scimitars and attack the nearest character, while trying to protect the witch. The Spirit Witch starts to summon another Dust Devil, but it will take her a full round of combat to do so, and she must roll her Summon Spirit 60% successfully to do so. If she is injured or highly distracted in some way, then the spell fails. If she is struck by the Spirit Knife from the False Shrine, then she releases a hideous scream as the blade absorbs her twisted soul and sends it to the Azure Hells where Gau-Gau-Stau awaits.

If the spell succeeds, then the Dust Devil attacks in the same way as it did in the earlier encounter, only this time the acolytes also suffer damage. They will try to seek shelter behind the altar while the Dust Devil attacks the characters. Kara's Spirit Block will negate the Dust Devil's attack, shielding the characters from harm and allowing them to try to rescue the children.

QUICK RULES

SKILLS

If you are called on to roll against a skill, take 2 ten sided dice of different colours (often known as d100) and roll the dice together. One colour represents the tens result, and the other represents the units: a roll of 4 on one dice and 3 on the other would therefore represent '43'. Compare this with the Chance number for the skill you are using.

- If the result is equal to, or below your Chance, then your skill attempt is a success.
- If the result is higher than your Chance, then your attempt failed.
- If your result is equal to or less than the Critical number for your skill, then your attempt to use the skill was not only successful, but gives you some extra advantage too. The Games Master will tell you what the advantage is, depending on the skill and the circumstances.
- If you roll 99 or 00 when you roll, then your skill attempt has failed badly. The Games Master will let you know what might happen.

AUGMENT

Some skills can be used to boost, or Augment, other skills. For example, if called upon to swim across a deep river, a character could use their Athletics skill to boost, or augment, their Swim skill. Add the Augment number for the skill you are using to do the boosting to the skill you have to roll against. Let's say a character has Swim 30% and Athletics 60%, with a +12% Augment, then you would add 12 to Swim 30% so that it now becomes 42%. The Games Master will tell you when you can and cannot Augment.

PASSIONS

Every character has a Passion listed at the end of their Skills; something they feel strongly about. You can roll against a Passion to see if how you feel will make you act in a certain way. Passions can also Augment other skills: whenever we feel Passionate about something, our Passions can help us succeed.

MAGIC

Some characters have spells they have learned during their careers. Casting a spell is just like rolling against a Skill, and the Chance to Cast successfully is noted in the Magic section. Casting a spell costs either 1 Magic Point or 3 Magic Points: if the cost is 3, then it is noted in the spell's description. Each spell has a specific magical effect that takes place immediately when the spell is cast. If successful, the Magic Points are spent. If a character reaches 0 Magic Points, they cannot cast any more magic. Most spells can be cast on either the character or someone else - be it one of the other characters or even someone the Games Master is controlling. The magic lasts for the current Scene, and must be cast again for different scenes.

COMBAT

If the characters get into a fight, they will take turns to resolve what happens, acting in order of Initiative, which is determined by rolling a 10 sided dice and adding the character's Initiative Bonus. The highest goes first. Characters spend Action Points to do something, such as attack or parry, move or cast magic. To successfully strike an enemy, make a skill roll against the character's Combat Style. The enemy can try to defend by making a similar roll. If the enemy succeeds in defending, they suffer either half or no damage, depending on what they are defending with. Bigger weapons, that have a higher Size can block more damage.

If a character hits and the opponent fails to defend, then the character has inflicted damage with their weapon, and created a Special Effect. The weapon damage is rolled, and is different for each weapon. The Special Effects are listed on cards that the Games Master will present if they are needed. The character chooses what Special Effect to use. The character also rolls a 20 sided die (1d20) to determine where the opponent takes damage. There are seven Hit Locations, noted on the character sheet, and the result of the 1d20 roll indicates which part of the body takes damage.

Each Hit Location has two ratings: Armour Points (AP) and Hit Points (HP). The AP number reflects the armour the character wears. This number reduces any damage a weapon might inflict. If Armour reduces the damage to zero, then the character is unharmed. If the damage exceeds the AP, then whatever is left reduces the Hit Point (HP) value. If HPs for a location fall below zero, then the location might be useless, or the character knocked unconscious or be near death. The Games Master will tell you the consequences.

Characters who are wounded can be healed either with First Aid or Magic. First Aid stops bleeding and restores 1 Hit Point, but only works if the Hit Points are still above 0. If Hit Points are below 0, then Magic is needed.

LUCK POINTS

Every character has 3 Luck Points. You can spend a Luck Point to:

- Reroll a skill
- Change the way the numbers are read when rolling for a skill (ie, swapping the 10s and Units results of a 1d100 roll)
- Reduce damage taken from a weapon
- Gain one additional Action Point if you have run out of Actions during a fight.
